

parties enjoyed the day's caving, even if all concerned were fairly wet.

Monday, the number of people caving was reduced considerably; some no doubt dampened by the night's rain. As a result, a small but efficient party went up to Kingsdale and did Bull Pot, which proved to be a fairly easy trip as far as we went. (We managed three out of the five pitches).

The journey back was slow, cramped and tiring, but was otherwise uneventful, and we eventually arrived back in London at about half past one on Tuesday morning.

John Bowden. V.S.L.